Reporting Tool combit List & Label 22 Launches This Fall: Productive Updates for Software Developers and Users

Constance, Germany, 2016-08-16 – Software manufacturer combit is set to release version 22 of its reporting tool List & Label this fall. The crosstabs in the Report Designer in particular are being upgraded with a wide range of new features and improvements. Developers can distribute it using their own application without any additional licensing fees. “Expandable regions, multiple result cells, and Top-N reports are among the new features,” according to Jochen Bartlau, Head of Development List & Label and Managing Director at combit. “The new chart types Radar and Treemap allow for more variety in this area,” he explains. Additionally, web applications will have various new options in the Web Designer. This way, project components, for example, can be used to centrally file continuously recurring report elements, such as address data, company logos, etc. An automatically created table of contents and index help simplify navigation within the report. This simplifies the creation of reports significantly. Designing interactive reports in the Web Designer is complemented by Drilldown. These are then displayed in the HTML5 viewer. The Reporting Tool allows users to animate reports with visual overlays, transitions, etc. This will help illustrate data-based insights even better during a presentation, so there is no need for a separate presentation program. In the company’s developer blog, combit provides extensive information on these and numerous other updates and new features in version 22 at www.combit.com/blog/development/.
