Reporting Tool combit List & Label 23 Will be Released in Late October: Web-based Out-of-the-box Reporting and Other New Features

Constance/Germany, 09/14/2017: Software manufacturer combit is expected to release version 23 of its List & Label reporting tool in late October. The new version offers important new features for users and software developers. The previously separately available combit Report Server is being merged into the Enterprise Edition. Without additional licensing costs, developers can now pass a browser-based reporting application out-of-the-box on to the customer with their application.

Moreover, users are expected to notice a significant boost in performance. "Our users will be very pleased about the speed increases when starting the Designer and printing out reports," says Jochen Bartlau, CEO and Head of Development List & Label. The additional updates for web developers contain, for example, the Ad-hoc Designer that functions in all modern browsers and with which users can quickly and easily design reports. Users can switch to the more extensive Web Designer at any time. Data from different sources can now be relationally linked. For example file-based formats such as CSV can now be connected to databases.

The Designer has also been updated: Donut diagrams can now represent several data series as interrelated rings. Circle or donut diagrams can also be shown as a segment. SVG graphics can now be placed directly in the Designer. The SVG export function has also been extensively updated and optimized.
